Transportation Day

Supporting school events like transportation day is so important. It allows children to see what we do and learn about different types of equipment required to keep our infrastructure going. On this trip we brought our digger truck for the students at CDS to inspect. Eric McDonald talked to the kids about how we use the auger and why we have this type of truck for the work that we do.

Students wanted to hear about digging holes for putting up power poles, but their favorite discovery was the microwave in one of the compartments so our crews can heat food while in the field.

WREA ANNUAL MEETING

Every year the Wyoming Rural Electric Association (WREA) hosts an annual meeting where Wyoming cooperatives come together to discuss and prioritize topics that affect cooperatives across the state to be addressed with the legislature in the coming year.

High Plains Power (HPP) belongs to the association and our representatives go to the capitol to engage with our lawmakers. They work with WREA director Shawn Taylor and the other cooperatives to make sure we have a voice with the legislators. Director Bret Gardner and CEO Darick Eisenbraun attended.

WREA exists in order to represent and support cooperatives across the state. There are 14 electric power distribution cooperatives (including HPP) plus three generation and transmission cooperatives that belong to WREA. Board members from the various cooperatives participate on the WREA Board and determine the goals of the association.

At High Plains Power, we believe that one of the best ways we can support our members and our communities is by participating in the legislative process and interacting with lawmakers to ensure that our members continue to have input in maintaining safe, reliable and affordable power.
